Early today, Susan Cabot, executive director of the New Hightown City Transit Authority, announced the Transit Authority's decision to pass an unpopular rule banning walking between moving cars on the commuter train. The decision drew criticism from many people who ride the trains. Ms. Cabot reminded opponents of the ban that although moving between cars to find an available seat was a common practice, it was also a very dangerous one. She added that the new rule would help ensure the safety of the passengers and reduce accidents.

Ms. Cabot further stated that transit police officers on patrol would be responsible for enforcing the ban. In most cases, they would issue a warning before writing a ticket. She declined, however, to mention specific criteria that would be used when deciding whether to issue a ticket: "We are not writing tickets for everything we see, nor are we assigning police officers to watch every move passengers make on board. If a passenger has a good reason for not observing the rules, officer discretion will prevail." Ms. Cabot ordered the Transit Authority to conduct a three-month study to monitor how often tickets are issued.

There are a fair number of middle-level jobs but proportionally few top-level jobs. This means there is stiff competition for high-ranking jobs. Candidates interested in these jobs must often move to another geographic region to locate a job matching their qualifications. Although few candidates show enthusiasm for uprooting their lives to relocate for a job, many prefer this to accepting a local job that they feel is below their experience. Two months ago, you responded enthusiastically to a survey about this fitness facility. Based on your recommendations, changes are planned for the fitness center. They will take effect on December 1. First of all, as requested, the fitness center will stay open three extra hours Monday through Thursday. Also, a new series of classes—most of them suggested by you—will begin. Finally, those of you who have been using the center will be pleased to hear that popular personal trainer Joseph Santiago will be promoted to manager of the fitness center.
